PRESERVE THE 1889 POINT ALLERTON U.S. LIFESAVING STATION

The 1889 Point Allerton U.S. Lifesaving Station has been a landmark for more than 100 years.

From this station, Joshua James and his crews launched dozens of rescues, and saved more than 600 lives.

Today, the Hull Lifesaving Museum welcomes thousands of visitors each year.

Point Allerton Station has withstood ferocious coastal storms—from 1898's Portland

Gale to the Blizzard of '78— but our exposed location takes a heavy toll.

We are planning a total restoration of this important structure. Urgently needed work will start this summer with a new roof.

Hull Lifesaving Museum's Point Allerton Station has been on the National Register of Historic Places since 1981.

PLEASE PRESERVE OUR LOCAL LANDMARK.

The Hull Lifesaving Museum is beginning a multi-phased restoration that will allow us to preserve this important landmark, while providing a full, year-round calendar of activities: lectures, children's programs, youth & adult rowing, exhibits, races, and job training.

Phase 1: Replacement of our distinctive and detailed cedar-shingled roof.

Subsequent phases: Architectural assessment of the building's needs and energy efficiency, clapboard replacement, and interior & exterior painting.
